

Not all Victorian children had lots of toys. Many families were poor, and toys cost a lot of money.

Instead, many children had to make up their own games to play. It meant that they only needed a few cheaper toys to have fun.

They played games like skipping, hopscotch, marbles and tag.

Can you invent a new game which only needs a ball and a box?

Draw your game below.

A large, empty rectangular box with a black border, intended for a child to draw their own game. The box is positioned below the text 'Draw your game below.' and occupies the lower half of the page.
